

To the FCC,

Come on now. It is hard enough to police the usage of cell phones on the ground especially when the safety demo is going on. People are ducking below seats using their phone and not paying attention to one word of these important announcements. This is also a problem for their neighbor sitting next to them who can hear nothing except for the phone conversation because the person is yelling to be heard by the receiver. Not only does this annoy people it scares alot of them as well. If you need to make a phone call that bad then you probably don't need to be on a moving airplane at thousands of feet in the air because what could possibly be accomplished while you are up there anyway. Please give us crew members as well as passengers a few hours of peace and quiet. We get way too much of this irritating ringing and talking on the ground. Let these passengers dream of their vacation and get away from reality while they are onboard an aircraft.....
Thanks and Aloha Charlotte
